

This is NOT a
real circus.

This is NOT a
real circus.

This is NOT a
real circus.

These people are NOT
professionals.

These people are NOT
professionals.

These people are NOT
professionals.

They are playing a game.

They are playing a game.

They are playing a
game.

These people are playing a live action roleplaying game called Colonel Sebastian T. Rawhide's Circus of the Spectacular.

In this game, the players are given characters with specific goals. The players are trying to achieve those goals while staying within the bounds of the character. For example, the character of Zelda the Clown cannot speak, so the player must try to communicate without speaking.

There is no true winner or loser. People are just playing to enjoy themselves. This is very much like improv theater, only there usually isn't an audience. But you can be the audience. You can pretend to be a circus goer at our pretend circus. You can talk to our players and they will respond as if they were really their character. Think of it like interactive theater, but don't expect the thrills and stunts of a real circus.

If you would like more information about live action roleplaying you can go to our web site at www.interactivitiesink.com. Or try the live action roleplaying association at www.larpa.org. And any of our event holders (the folks in the vests) will be happy to answer any more questions you might have.

These people are playing a live action roleplaying game called Colonel Sebastian T. Rawhide's Circus of the Spectacular.

In this game, the players are given characters with specific goals. The players are trying to achieve those goals while staying within the bounds of the character. For example, the character of Zelda the Clown cannot speak, so the player must try to communicate without speaking.

There is no true winner or loser. People are just playing to enjoy themselves. This is very much like improv theater, only there usually isn't an audience. But you can be the audience. You can pretend to be a circus goer at our pretend circus. You can talk to our players and they will respond as if they were really their character. Think of it like interactive theater, but don't expect the thrills and stunts of a real circus.

If you would like more information about live action roleplaying you can go to our web site at www.interactivitiesink.com. Or try the live action roleplaying association at www.larpa.org. And any of our event holders (the folks in the vests) will be happy to answer any more questions you might have.

These people are playing a live action roleplaying game called Colonel Sebastian T. Rawhide's Circus of the Spectacular.

In this game, the players are given characters with specific goals. The players are trying to achieve those goals while staying within the bounds of the character. For example, the character of Zelda the Clown cannot speak, so the player must try to communicate without speaking.

There is no true winner or loser. People are just playing to enjoy themselves. This is very much like improv theater, only there usually isn't an audience. But you can be the audience. You can pretend to be a circus goer at our pretend circus. You can talk to our players and they will respond as if they were really their character. Think of it like interactive theater, but don't expect the thrills and stunts of a real circus.

If you would like more information about live action roleplaying you can go to our web site at www.interactivitiesink.com. Or try the live action roleplaying association at www.larpa.org. And any of our event holders (the folks in the vests) will be happy to answer any more questions you might have.